Roar Baby Monitors Debuts Rugged Outdoors Baby Monitors for Camping Families

Specially designed baby monitors have durable design and long-lasting battery life to give camping families peace of mind

OCTOBER 30, 2022 - There were more than 93.8 million camping households across the U.S. alone in 2021, according to statistics from the KOA. Roar Baby Monitors is helping these households and families get the most from their camping trips with a newly launched baby monitor designed for the outdoors.

Roar Baby Monitors founder Austin De La Cruz says his entire family camped when he was growing up. He wanted to take his own family camping, but when he became a parent he realized the need for a truly dependable baby monitor that could live up to the standards of camping.

He couldn't find a solution on the market, so De La Cruz set out to create his own design. After two years of extensive design and testing, Roar Baby Monitors were born.

This exciting new design is a wireless baby monitor built with an extensively durable and practical design. The small handheld receiver weight in at just 7 ounces and can be conveniently clipped on a belt loop or placed in a pocket. Both the parent and child units feature a rechargeable lithium-ion battery that gives users an incredible 20+ hours of use. The long-range Roar Baby Monitors can be used up to 1000 feet apart from one another, giving parents more flexibility and freedom when camping. Turning to the rugged build of the Roar Baby Monitor, both units are constructed with a water-resistant and drop-proof exterior designed to tolerate the adventures of camping.

Roar Baby Monitors allow parents to enjoy the freedoms of camping, such as sitting around a fire at night while the children are asleep. "Roar Baby Monitors allows my family to continue enjoying the great outdoors while being safe and secure,” said De La Cruz. “I’m proud to know that they will help many other families as well.”
